FORMER GENEVA STUDENT GUILTY OF THREATENING SCHOOL OFFICIAL

May 25, 2012

A former Geneva schools student has been convicted of threatening a Geneva school official via email last year.

Daniel T. Diomedes, 19 (d.o.b. 3-17-1993), now of St. Charles, was convicted late Thursday, May 24, 2012, by Associate Judge James C. Hallock, of one count of disorderly conduct, a Class 4 felony.

Diomedes waived his right to a jury trial.

On April 26, 2011, Diomedes sent to a third party witness an email in which he threatened to kill a dean at Geneva High School. The witness then contacted the Geneva Police Department and Geneva High School. Diomedes was a student at the school at the time.

Judge Hallock set Diomedes' next court appearance for 1:30 p.m. Aug. 8, 2012, in Courtroom 313 for post-trial motions and sentencing.

Diomedes faces a sentence of probation or between 1 and 3 years in the Illinois Department of Corrections.

Diomedes remains free on $2,000 bond and GPS monitoring. As a condition of bond, Diomedes is to have no contact with the victim and he is prohibited from entering Geneva High School.

The case was prosecuted by Kane County Assistant State's Attorneys Deborah Lang and Andrew Whitfield.
